We honor Charles Louis Kincannon for his dedicated service to his country and to his profession internationally. He managed and led the Census Bureau for two large spans of his career and in-between served as the first Chief Statistician for the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development. He had numerous accomplishments in his career, one of which being the first career civil servant to receive a Presidential appointment to be Director of the Census Bureau. During his time first as Deputy Director and later as Director, the Census Bureau launched the American Community Survey and moved into a new facility. This presentation remembers Louis and his professional and personal accomplishments.
